ficent results of General Grant's faithful administration of national affairs will cause it to be as proudly remembered and as widely honored as President Lincoln's is now.

The persistent affort to put Mr Colfax in the position of at least quasi-antegonesm to the renomination of President Grant must be our applicably for thus presenting the substance of this conversation to our readers. He said, "If you can find any stronger language to express my vijws on this point use it freely," as he has not and never has had any sympathy everal business houses.

He responded to the fourth regular coast as follows: "Our Western Rivers and Inland Sens-Created by God as the great highways of commerce, they are cutified to consideraion commensurate with the advantage hey were designed to confer.
Gentlemen of the Convention: I think that the Committee of Tosski intended to limit me. They don't propose I shall cross the Allispheny or Rocky Mountaine, but the field is wide enough. Eighteen thousand miles of coast line upon our inand eeas and great Northern lakes, and thirty-four thousand miles of coast line upon the great waters of the Mississippi where eteambosts navigate and freight is received and discharged, most certainly afford ample field. The magnitude of the particular pet, the river of the Musicalppi valley, sooms very much as one of our sailors said to an Englishman when he saked, 'where is Pittsburgh?' 'I will tell you,' said the sailor. 'Go to tell you, said the sailor. "Go to New Orleans, and up the Mississippi river a thousand miles, then turn off and go another thousand miles, then turn off and the Ohio, and you will find. Pittsburgh. We might say more than the Mississippi, and, passing up the Mississippi, and, passing up the Mississippi, and, passing up the Mississippi, and passing they are forgotten things—that they are thought to be old-fashroued, and have been almost abandoned by commerce. Not been almost abandoned by commerce. Not yet, sir. They have not been forgotten; they cannot be forgotten. We have been mill by, it being much more affectual than mall by, it being much more affectual than a halter or bridle in checking his frantic everything else, it has been favored for a time. I would not under-estimate to you the importance of these great railroad lines, but the people of this nation are beginning to look, and so beginning to see that, if the few leading railroad lines are combined and condensed into four, three, that, if the few leading railroad lines are great channel of commerce, and that the great productions of the west would be at its mercy for conveyance to the world. I say, not yet can these old rivers be forgotten. The rivers are public highways, they are free, any man can run a boat. [Applause.] I should like to speak more about this. I should like a "boal, like all the first and proceed to the boant is addled."

A leather strap attached to the boant is an account to be added.

And or not have the animal by, it being much more affectual than imally, it is not to serve as a bridle and to attact the animally, it is not to serve, rivers be forgotten. The rivers are public highways, they are free, any man can run a boat. [Applause.] I should like to speak more about this. I should like to point with pride to where these rivers roach, and to what fields they bear the different productions. From the Alleghenies, with their rich beds of coal and tron, down the beautiful Chio, where wheat and corn are grown in all their luxuriance, and from the Rocky mountains, where we see kindred staples; on down, until you see the cotton and the syrup, and the sugar of the far South—then upon the great inland seas from Duluth in out the sight, would think that it was intended to the rivers and addernable to the sight, would think that it was intended to the rivers and and the syrup.
